Carol Daggs- Local Author/Historian Brandtville

This week we had the pleasure of hearing from a local author and historian, Carol Daggs. She has focused on the small area outside of Saratoga Springs that is known as Brandtville, where her family has resided. She is fourth generation Saratogian and graduated from Saratoga Springs High School before attending Hartwick College and Univ of Amherst earning an undergraduate degree and Masters of Arts in Music. She is a longtime musical performer and recently performed at the Apollo Theater in 2016.

Her book, Saratoga Soul Brandtville Blues is a visual narrative collection representing an historic agglomeration of African-American life in upstate Saratoga Springs, New York. This publication includes an initial sampling of the photographic collection. The greatest number of photographs were acquired as relatives passed away. Photographic materials then passed into the author's possession. Other photos have long been in the Daggs family circulation. Many of the vintage images capture the quiet lucid beauty of a rural African American family and their beautiful life experience. The photographs span several decades during the Twentieth Century. These souls were the early inhabitants of Brandtville and stewards of the land. They tell the story of Saratoga Soul Brandtville Blues.

Carol, read some excerpt from her book which is composed of alphabetical chapters each representing a unique part of the history of the Brandtville. During the early 1900's the Brandtville area was then on the outskirts of the Saratoga Springs city and was a predominantly agricultural area. Carol's family and others farmed and lived on this small part of land and were a very tight knit community.

She still lives in her grandfather's house and has been able to keep its expensive upkeep through historical grants. She has been the subject and speaker and numerous events and reading in Saratoga. Her book can be bought through her website, www.saratogasoulbook.com

Also for a video presentation of her speaking about her book please see the linked youtube video presentation. <https://youtu.be/kdMWa5hsXFc>
